Nestled in the 'Town of Trees', the dedicated members of the Cambridge Tree Trust are working to keep the town beautiful, attract the song of native New Zealand birds and support the recreational spaces for the very active community.

You may see Tree Trust members and supporters on any given Tuesday, because rain or shine the team meet and do whatever needs to be done, helping to develop healthy and sustainable environments throughout Cambridge.

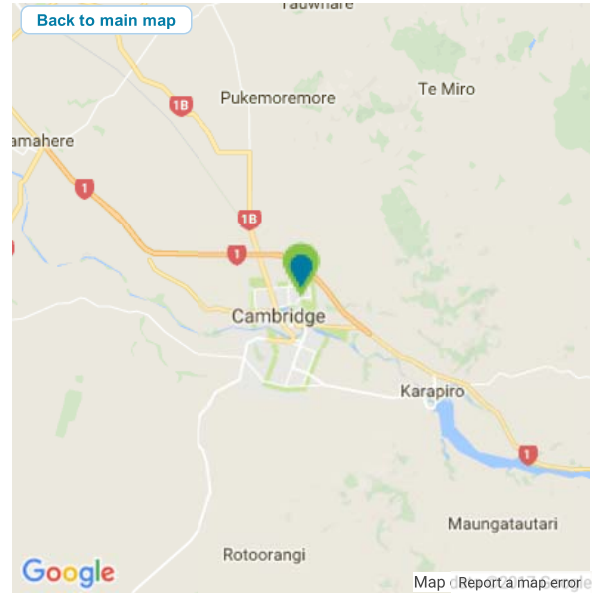

The trust has a number of volunteer projects running, including restoration at Lake Te Koutu, plantings at Riverview Terrace and Soldiers Track, infill planting at Lola Silcock Park, restoration and development of the Meadow Walk, planting at the Victoria Street Bridge Abutment, and planting along the Steelway. The trust has helped develop many sites in and around the city – view them on their project map.

At 73 years young, trust chairperson Don Willoughby and the enthusiastic team of volunteers are always glad of an extra pair of hands. Spend a morning volunteering with the Cambridge Tree Trust volunteers on Tuesday's at their nursery on 89 Thornton Road.

With thousands of trees and plants in the ground and the growing number of melodies from native birds this little group really is making a great difference in their community.

This project has received funding from the Waikato River Authority (WRA 11-017)
